1. In 1951 the town of Celldomolk was enlarged by incorporating the nearby village of Alsosag into one community. At present, at least 10 thousand people are living in Celldomolk, about 60% of whom are railway personnel and pensioners. Celldomolk is a railroad town.
2. The railway knot which is one of the main functions in western Hungary gained in importance after World War II when the previous repair workshops along the line running to Szeg were enlarged. In the northern outskirts of the town itself, new glassworks are under construction close to the railway line toward Sopron. Also a large tractor lending station and repair workshops employing about 200 drivers and mechanics were installed in the former military barracks which were abandoned by the army in 1945 and since then were never used for military purposes again. Almost all villages in the vicinity of Celldomolk have been nationalized.
